A COPIOUS DICTIONARY

In Three Parts :

I. The ENGLISH before the LATIN,

Enriched with about Ten thousand Words more then any former Dictionary contains.

II. The LATIN before the ENGLISH,

With correct and plentiful Etymological Derivations, Philological Observations, and Phrazeological Explications.

III. The Proper Names of Persons, Places,

And other things necessary to the understanding of Historians and Poets.

To which are adjoined

A Table of Authors Names at large, which in this Book are made use of, or mentioned ; and also some lesser Tractates.

The whole being a Comprisal of THOMASUS and RIDER'S Foundations, HOLLAND'S and HOLYOAK'S Superstructure and Improvements :

Together with Amendments and Enlargements very considerable for number and nature, promoted and carried on by a diligent search into, and perusal of several other Dictionaries, and many Authors ancient and modern :

Rendring this Work the most complete and useful of any in this kind yet extant ; As the Preface doth particularly declare, and the Book it self will more fully evidence.

THE PREFACE.

IT is not the intendment of this Introductory discourse, to perswade the world of the usefulness, or rather necessity of such Gates of language and learning: The rational and convincing Prefaces of many learned men, the heavy progress of former times much wanting them, with the general acceptance of and great improvement by these helps in later times, render such labors useless. But the present design is to give a plain and brief account of other undertakings of this nature, especially by Learned men of our own; and of what hath bin endeavoured in this present work; and in both to give the Reader that satisfaction he certainly will and justly may expect as to this Book offered to view.

To Languages as well as Dominions (with all other things under the Sun) there is an appointed time: they have had their infancy, foundations and beginning; their growth and increase, in purity and perfection, as also in spreading and propagation; their state of consistency; and their old age, declinings and decays. That thus it pleased the divine providence to deal with Rome in her Power and Tongue is abundantly manifest: For after that she, that had bin the Mistress and Glory of the world, grew ripe for the recompence of her pride, tyranny, persecutions and all abominations, the Barbarians (for language and manners) over-ran her and her territories, and seven times in much less then 100 years trampled upon her glory. From these times, and peculiarly the Goths establishment, towards the end of the fifth Century, the genuine purity of the Latin tongue was sensibly imbas'd, and indeed as to a general acceptation, all real Learning (and Religion very much) ran low and dreggy. Onely, as God reserved in successive ages of degeneracy and darkness some Witnesses to his truth; so were there some Worthy men now and then appearing for the vindication of learning, and those tongues that did most befriend her. One of the first most direct and considerable attempts of this kind (as to the Latin tongue) was made by Papias a Lombard, whose work, though wanting the best method for use, viz. Alphabetical order, and not wanting some oversights and impertinencies, yet was a good essay for those times towards the derivation and explication of Latin words: this was towards the end of the twelfth Century, when as for a considerable time before and after, the Latin tongue had scarce any writers worthy notice, only some few (and those but ordinary) Historians, and some School-men (with their niceties wrapped up in improper Language) appeared in the world, and indeed not many learned men among the Grecians, onely in the Hebrew and Arabian tongues learning flourish'd. A considerable time after this Vocabulist (for so is he named,) Nestor Dionysius of Novara in the Dutchy of Millan succeeded, and what Papias his Vocabulary, and some other works of like nature (some having, some wanting the names of their Authors) had heaped up, and in some things had mistaken, or were themselves by their too ignorant successors mistaken, he with considerable amendments and improvements reduced into order by an Alphabetical handling: and this not without the envy and exclamations of his contemporaries, who so far were strangers to good Latin, so little were sensible of its depravations among them, and so much loved their Barbarisms, that they hated, derided and opposed whatever offered at the redeeming of learning from its present slavery. After him many industrious and able restorers of learning followed apace, and about the year 1494 Ambrosius Calepinus treading in his steps and method: But that work of his at its first birth bare no proportion to its present stature, to which it hath gradually increased at many Editions in several Places, by the labors of Montanus, Passeratius and other excellent builders upon his foundation. Not to enlarge too far, take but two more: Robert Stephens, that learned Printer, about the year 1536 put forth his Thesaurus, a book of great industry and worth: of which Cooper saith, The greatness is the only inconvenience of that golden work. And not long after, Joannes Frisius published his Latin and German Dictionary. To come to our own Writers of Dictionaries. About the same time, Sir Th. Eliot, an able Lawyer and every way a famous Scholar in those daies, first brake the ice as to our English tongue, with great pains compiling a Latin and English Dictionary called his Bibliotheca, in the reign of K. Hen. 8. to whom it is dedicated. This Work Thomas Cooper, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the 6th, Augmented and Enriched with 33000 Words and Phrases, besides a fuller account of the true Signification of Words, farther declaring, that there was a Complaint of innumerable Faults in Eliot, by too strict following Calepine, the mistakes of Impressions, or his own haste and oversight. Afterward the Reverend and Learned Cooper, Bishop of Lincoln, reserving still as a Foundation Eliot's and his own former Labors upon him, and making great use of Stephens Thesaurus and Frisius his Dictionary (insomuch that F. Holyoak saith, he translated Frisius his German into English) put forth his Thesaurus linguæ Romanæ & Britannicæ, about the year 1565. About these times Baret's Alvearium, being an English and Latin Dictionary, was prepared, and printed 1573. In the year 1583, Rich. Hutton makes the French-part of Gul. Morelius (that Learned Printer to the French King) his Commentarii, to speak English. To come nearer our present Work: In the year 1588, Tho. Thomasius, the Printer to the University of Cambridg, puts forth his Dictionary in 8°, which was so acceptable a Work, that in eight years it had five Impressions with the Authors Corrections and Enlargements, in the carrying on of which Work he died: John Legat undertaketh, with his place, the Printing of his Work 1596, in which fifth Edition many Words were added out of Physicians, Lawyers, Mathematicians, &c.

8cc. Also Examples and Instances out of best Authors, and a Dictionary of Names of Places and Persons added thereto. Since this time it hath risen to fourteen Editions, not without signal Improvement, especially by Doctor Philemon Holland; of which Fr. Holyoak freely and ingenuously acknowledgeth, That by that learned person in Physique and Philology it was so wonderfully enriched, that there was no Dictionary of that kind extant, that for Number of words, perfect Interpretation, and choice Phrases may be compared with it. John Rider, Minister of St. M. Magdalen Bermondsey in Southwark, and afterward Bp of Killaloo in Ireland, (not long after Tho. Thomafius) published his work, as an Epitomizer of all the learnedst and best Dictionaries then in English, superadding much of his own to what was then extant: That part whereof which hath the Latin before the English was swallowed up by Francis Holyoak's greater attempt and performance: which work of Holyoaks, however designed (as he prefaceth) before Becmannus, Fungerus and Martinius came out, yet is not a little beholding to them, especially the last, as may appear to anyone that shall compare them in some few words. Very lately an ingenious person, Christopher Wase, hath published a more contracted Dictionary, a compend of Calepine, a book of good use.

Having thus led the Reader with the series of time thorow the most considerable works of this nature, now let him take this account of the Book before him. As to the adding this Dictionary, after others that have been well reputed and are useful, let it be considered, That they were written one after another, and that was no hinderance to their Authors pains or others acceptance: yea others of late in other Countries have been and are still adding new to the old: and who can fix the time when such works are at the height of all desirable or possible Perfection, where Hercules's Pillars may be placed with a Ne plus ultra? Nay, it will appear by what followeth, that even the later Dictionaries have been defective: Moreover they, as hath been represented, had their Amendments and Increase by successive Endeavors and Editions, raising them to that pitch wherein they stand. As to what hath been endeavoured, and (we doubt not) in good measure performed in this Edition, we will speak to the several parts of the Book distinctly.

As to that Part which hath the English before the Latin;

The English it self is very much restored where faulty and mis-spelled in former Dictionaries: And in the Latin of them many faults corrected.

The leading Words are put generally into their natural Order and due place, whereas before they were much transposed.

Many Heads of English with their Latin supplied: And very many Additional Latin Words Inserted in their places under the former English; both, by a modest computation, amounting to at least Ten Thousand. And this not without furtherance by a Folio Manuscript, which seemeth seemeth to be of good Antiquity and precedent to Rider. So that there is a considerable Accession, as may appear to the Peruser.

THE PREFACE.

As to that Part which hath the Latin before the English, Multitudes of Faults amended in the Words, both Latin, Greek, Hebrew and English.

The Sense which was sometimes unintelligible, and sometimes lame and defective, is now made Entire and Plain, so far as brevity would permit.

The joyning with good coherence of several Designs in other Dictionaries, in one Volume in This, is considerable. Formerly the Pure and Proper Latin Words were in one Alphabet; the Obsolete, Antique and Antiquated Words in another, to the trouble of Him that searched for a Word. And if it be inquired, why those Words that are of a baser Alloy are not by some Mark distinguished from the more currant and usual Words: Let it be considered; First, That it is hard to set the just Boundaries and Landmarks of the more approvable Latin, and that which by degrees crept in with the declinings of the Empire, decay of Learning and mixture of Barbarous Nations. Secondly, That this part of a Dictionary is little consulted, but for the understanding of a Word found in an Author, and doth not considerably belong to the making of Latin. Besides, that the Nature of the Authors quoted generally intimateth when a Word is suspicious for purity, and when not. Moreover, formerly the Etymologies and Notations of the Word were chiefly minded by some; the Instances of Use, and Phrases in Authors most attended by others: This hath the former (and supplies that defect in Thomas) for the understanding of the whole frame of the Latin-Tongue, and its Derivations. This hath also the Later (therein supplying that great Defect in Rider and Holyoak;) Phrases being a Clavis to Authors, letting us in to their Sense and Meaning, as also a Guide to the genuine and proper use of the Tongue. Besides, that the English is very large in shewing the Signification of the Words, and supplies the absence of some Phrases, which to have put in, would have swoln the BOOK beyond bounds.

A considerable number of Words, never before in Thomas nor Holyoak, are added.

Many pertinent and excellent Philological Observations, Etymologies and Criticisms, together with Enlargements in Phrases and English inserted.

Order exceedingly restored to the leading Words which were very un-Alphabetical before; as also to the Matter under them, which was very confused, and sometimes the Remarks or Instances belonging to one Word were set under another. And this strictness of Alphabetical Order observed, without prejudice to the meanest Readers understanding of the Primitive Word, for it is named in handling the Derivative, and the Reader directed to it.

Needful quantities of Syllables generally supplied and rectified, as an Help,

THE PREFACE.

Help in due Pronunciation of the Words, or composing of Verses. If the Quantity be not marked over every Word and Syllable, let but an Eye be cast upon Words of the same Kindred and Quantities before or after it, and satisfaction may be had: whereas formerly they were omitted or mistaken very much.

Authors names added where wanting and needful; rectified where mistaken; and set to their proper matter where misplaced.

Capital and Italick letters used, to make more conspicuous and more easily observable those words and things which are most considerable. A thing before not minded.

As to that part which contains the Proper names;

The principal words handled were often misrepresented, but now much rectified; together with the matter under them.

Very many wholly new added: As also some considerable things adjoyned to the Old Heads; together with many modern names of places. And this by consulting Ortelius his Thesaurus Geographicus, and the last and best, i.e. the London Edition of Ferrarius his Geographical Lexicon.

The Chronology often bettered. The Topography rendred more exact.

The History, and Genealogy of Persons much amended.

As to this and the former Dictionary, the pointing regulated.

Besides, a Catalogue of the Names of Authors at large collected, for the satisfaction of all, and benefit of those that could not well understand them by their initial letters.

The other pieces annexed have sundry amendments: and one added, which no former Dictionaries contained, viz. The old Names, by which places, belonging to this Realm, were represented and known.

As to the whole, the peruser may find

Innumerable Emendations: some of which may (without a breach upon modesty) be thought to have been the oversights and mistakes of the Writers, however happily industrious in most things: and others proceeding from a not sufficiently careful Printing of Books whose fame did challenge credit and esteem: the last Editions of these books, as Aristotle saith of new models of Government, having the errors of the former beside their own; the faults of the first, as Physicians write of the Concoctions, being seldom or never corrected in the following.

Great Enlargements: which the length and largeness of the page abundantly demonstrateth: so that this may be judged to contain more matter (beside many thousands of amendments) by a third or fourth part then the last Editions either of Thomas or Rider, especially considering many superfluities cut off, repetitions prevented, and the words and matter closely couched and contracted, as far as might be without prejudice to a full understanding of the sense.

THE PREFACE.

in Thomafius, Rider or Holyoak (yea few fuch things, that are found in other Dictionaries, and could be comprised in fuch a Volume) can be faid to be wanting: And if therefore there be retained fome Etymologies which may feem not fo proper, and fo many that may feem not fo needful, the Reader then cannot complain of defect, but may take his choice, and receive fome fatisfaction from feeing what was accounted learning in former Ages, And all this performed,

By confulting the Authors mentioned generally both Antient, Modern and Lateft, efppecially where any thing might rationally appear doubtful or defective: for had we not taken this courfe, many places and paffages had been obfcure or imperfect ftill.

By comparing former and truer, at leaft various Editions of Dictionaries in prefent ufe, yea later and improved Editions of Writers made ufe of by other compilers of Dictionaries: and indeed, that we may make honourable mention of a benefactor, much is added (though not alway with the Authors name) out of that excellent pofthumous work of the admirably learned Gerardus Joannes Voffius, his Etymologicon linguæ Latinæ.

By probable and rational conjectures, fubmitted to the judgment of the Reader. And Laftly, By palpablenefs of many miftakes, and apparent plainnefs of the ways of amendment.

As to all which, there were great pains and long time beftowed on, and more hands then one employed in the work.

Having thus endeavoured the fatisfaction of the Reader, we fhall onely mind him of two or three things more.

Some words (and poffibly fometimes things) are taken upon the credit of former Authors of like works to this, as not unlikely they had but a traditional knowledge of them neither: and probably at the beft found in fome antient and defective books, whole Authors names were not annexed, or not thought worthy of a mention, or are now loft. Thefe words we impofe not, no more then omit: Yet endeavors have not been wanting to find out the head of any fuch Nilus, and the Parents of fuch expositions foundlings.

We are not guilty of fo much vanity as to pretend this work Perfect, either in the Whole, as if nothing could be added; or in its Parts, as if nothing might be altered: No can any humane Work lay claim to this privilege, much lefs Dictionaries in which are fo great varieties and intricacies, and, as to many things contained, diffents of able Criticks.

Yet muft we profefs a confidenc, that this work will bear us out in declaring, That for Matter contained, and Manner of perfomance, it comes not behind, but for Copioufnefs and Accuracy, and confequently for Ufefulness, exceeds what ever hath been undertaken for the Englifh ufe.

This we thought beft to fpeak in Englifh, for they to whom this Book can prove generally ufeful, muft underftand that tongue; but many, to whom the fatisfaction of a Preface would be acceptable, cannot underftand Latin.
